

Editor Quits, Money Crisis Hits Ramparts

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 30 (UPI) — Publisher Frederick C. Mitchell said today that Ramparts magazine is in "a serious financial crisis," but it will try to continue to publish.

Mitchell's statement was made after an all-night meeting in which the magazine's board of directors discussed the resignation of Warren Hinckle III as president and editorial director.

Hinckle said most of the magazine's staff would join him in forming a new publication, Barricades. He said the new magazine would begin publication on Feb. 24. He said he found backing for the new magazine while on an unsuccessful fund-raising trip to New York for Ramparts.
